

Hi Elif,

Thank you for sharing your literature review with me. Your topic is fascinating and incredibly significant, so I appreciate your willingness to tackle it.

Information-wise, I believe that your paper has some really strong sources that provide a lot of useful insight on the different factors that affect maternal and childhood mortality. I believe, however, that you should work to describe the findings of these sources in more concrete terms, as it's sometimes unclear what the sources are trying to say when you integrate them into your paper.

I also noticed some language and grammatical issues. Particularly, there seemed to be some issues with parallelism that detracted from the greater points of the literature review. Make sure that phrases separated by commas are of the same grammatical form or they will seem disjointed and difficult to understand. Additionally, there is a lot of repetition of words like "determinants," "socioeconomic," "factors," etc. While repetition isn't necessarily a bad thing, these words are often used in sentences that are very similar in structure or meaning. Try to vary your words and sentence structure a bit more.

Best of luck for the final draft!

Sincerely,
Michelle
